When it was announced, early on Wednesday morning November 9th 2016, that Donald Trump was also President-Elect Donald Trump; a poem went viral on social media. "Differences of Opinion," the British poet Wendy

Cope's sharp evisceration of mansplaining, spoke, in its spare nine lines, to a political moment that has been defined in large part by a tense relationship both with women and with facts.

Poetry has the capacity capture complicated ideas and emotions in only a few lines — to get at the core of an experience and make it fully relatable, even when the best word we have for it is a clumsy portmanteau like “mansplaining.” Written by contemporary English poet Wendy Cope, this poem perfectly explains mansplaining, that awkwardly-named, yet all too common, phenomenon of a man unnecessarily explaining something to a woman about which she is already well-informed. A poetry lover posted the poem to twitter today, and — surprise, surprise — a bunch of people responded to explain why she's wrong about mansplaining. Because life is a perfect circle, everyone.

Differences of Opinion poem by Wendy Cope

HE TELLS HER

He tells her that the earth is flat —

He knows the facts, and that is that.

In altercations fierce and long

She tries her best to prove him wrong.

But he has learned to argue well.

He calls her arguments unsound

And often asks her not to yell.

She cannot win. He stands his ground.

The planet goes on being round.

Mr. Trump's hands shows he will make America great again
